Account log in and sign up are in a clear and familiar location

Quick access to navigate to different library pages

Vertical linear column flow to page provides clear reading order

Slideshow for regularly updated announcements/events/pet photos is placed at top so users immediately see the info

Search is clearly defined on page and easy to access immediately after opening the website

Use of distinct and consistent headings, subheadings, and paragraph text to create visual hierarchy of information

Have one central browsing section to catch user's eyes with images displayed on home page rather than having multiple separate text blurbs/links throughout the page to different browsing options

Stand out buttons with icons for important features rather than simple text anchors

Direct people to relevant pages rather than displaying too much on home page

Though still important enough to warrant having it on the home page, this info is least likely to be what users are looking for on the page so they are at the bottom

Remove redundant menu at the bottom (though this may be more of a personal choice since some websites repeat the navbar as an index at the bottom but I found it unnecessary)
